Common Student Misconceptions

1. For an equilibrium system the concentration of any reactant or product can never be zero. No matter how small or how large the equilibrium constant, there must always be some products and some reactants in order for an equilibrium to exist.